Recto

(5) To the Excellency, our brother and beloved in God, the honourable priest Rūks Qudsī—may God prolong his life. (6) After kissing hands, we acknowledge to your respected self that your precious letter reached us (7) on the 20th of the month Ottobre, i.e., the month Baba, in the year 1758, (8) in which you inform us about the arrival of the books that I sent to you, and about (9) your safety, and we were greatly content to hear that. But on the other hand, (10) we were sorry about the death of our brother, the deceased priest ʿAwaḍ—My God’s mercy be upon him, and may God give you consolation (11) and may there be recompense for you, because we cannot offer anything but prayers for him and his welfare (12) from the Creator and peace for his soul. Then we would like to ask you to inform us about the large (13) paintings that belong to us that were in his keeping and about some other books we gave to him (14) in Rome to sell on our behalf. So, please inform us about everything, especially (15) about the paintings, because they belong to the Church’s charitable organisation (waqf) and no one has the right to dispose of them. (16) Finally, we wish you to keep in touch and not delay in (17) doing as you did previously, because for a long time we have received nothing (18) from you but this letter, which reached us this year after a thirteen-month (19) delay. From now on, please do not forget us for such a long period again. (20) Finally, send our greetings to all the brothers who (21) are with you, the beloved in God; the Master Mushraqî al-Bâskî and his family; (22) and to our relatives and to all who are under your protection send our greetings,

Commentary

There is a marked difference in register within the corpus of Arabic Prize Papers between letters written by merchants and those written by clerics. The clerical letters overall show more literary forms, such as the future particle sa- and much-increased use of the negation particle lam. These forms are used as stylistic markers of the clerical register and were probably introduced through exposure of the clerics to literary Arabic texts, which led to the development of a particular clerical register.
At the same time, vernacular, non-literary forms occur in particular sociolinguistic circumstances and we also find phonological and morphological Middle Arabic forms similar to those found in the traders’ correspondence.

Line 7

الدعا ‘prayer’. As in most Middle Arabic texts, hamza is not spelled.

Line 13

من مدة طويلة لم وصلنا من عندكم خبر ‘for a long time, no news reached us from you’. The negation particle lam is a register marker in various Middle Arabic varieties. In the clerical Prize Paper letters, as in many other Middle Arabic texts, lam has considerably enlarged its functions, and occurs with the perfect, in contradiction to Classical Arabic grammar.

With the imperfect, lam negates the present and with the perfect, past tense forms. The use of lam appears to be related to register in the Prize papers, with clerical writers much more likely to use it than mercantile authors.

Line 15

ثلاثة عشرة أشهر ‘13 months’. In most of the Arabic Prize papers under HCA 32/212, there is little marking of the Standard Arabic interdental fricatives /ḍ/and /ṯ/, and they are usually spelled as dāl and tā’. The writer of the letter, Rafael al-Ṭūḵī, is an exception in his use of marking /ṯ/ with three dots.

3 For an extensive discussion of lam in spoken and written varieties of Arabic, see Wagner (2010, 141–50).
